Learning Opportunity

This working session will provide an opportunity to explore the Social Studies Pilot Curriculum, Instructional planning and delivery strategies, resource identification and development, and challenges and opportunities for piloting and delivering the Social Studies Curriculum in 2024. In-Person First and last full days, 1/2 Day Zoom in Between. Online - if required will be supported, however online participants must be prepared to work in breakout rooms throughout the session.

- On-line participants should be prepared to work in breakout groups clustered by grade.

Presenters

Dr. Rick Gilson

After 39 years of full-time work in education, Rick is currently supporting the work as one of our consultant team members.

Rick has experience teaching English and Social Studies (9-12 academic and non-academic streams) with some Computers, CALM, and a touch of IB Theory of Knowledge folded in for fun. Experienced in Educational leadership as a High School Administrator (14 years, the last nine as Principal) with six years at the Central office, the last five as Assistant Superintendent before spending six years as the Director at SAPDC supporting professional learning.

An avid reader and eternal learner, Rick enjoys coaching, teaching, and supporting others in various capacities, including personal and professional development. Co-host of the APLC Podcast and a YouTube enthusiast with his "Read by Grandpa for his Grandchildren and anyone who would like to listen" series on examples elementary teachers (and others) are welcome to check it out. His primary focus areas are literacy, inclusion, social studies, wellness, personal and professional leadership, and growth.
